

FINANCIER OF BOSTON LIKES THIS DISTRICT

Says Mining Industry is Growing in Popularity With Investors in the East

"I feel that mining enterprises are due for a material comeback," said John D. Beyer of Boston, now in Goldfield for an indefinite stay. Mr. Beyer will make a comprehensive and general survey of the district, and expects later to be joined by some of the best known mining engineers in the world. Mr. Beyer, who is said to represent a group of eastern bankers and brokers, says an unusual comeback of the Goldfield district is possible, and he outlined his ideas on this subject, says the Tribune.

"There is plenty of money in the east for legitimate mining back on the Atlantic seaboard, but conditions have changed and the methods and means of tapping even five years ago, will not do now," he said. "We are much governed in the east by the so-called blue sky commission. These bodies elect to pass judgment on all issues offered, and are especially prejudiced against mining companies. New England, which was one of the best of all fields for the raising of money for mining, is now almost dead of that field.

"A mining company now attempting to finance its needs through brokers must have their brokers get permission of the blue sky commission before it can go ahead and sell stock. In Massachusetts and Rhode Island they can sell under permit but may be stopped any time the commission thinks it advisable. In Vermont all mining is refused. In the judgment of many states there are no good mines. In New Hampshire and Maine the restrictions are almost prohibitive, except to those mining interests who have plenty of money to take care of their companies.

"By listing you avoid much of the commission interference, yet it still involves a great deal of expense, and the small mining man must remain outside the money raising district. Indiana, Michigan and Illinois have rules that permit the commissions the right to send engineers and others at your expense to your properties at their whim in order that they shall be able at all times to pass on your stock and its possibilities.

"With such handicaps there is good reason for the decline of such camps as Goldfield, Divide, your near neighbor, is another case in point. If Goldfield is ever to regain its place in the mining world, it must organize to promote the district. A number of years back when the mining claims in this territory were owned by several different interests, it was possible for some companies to do surface work only, gather a bit here and there, possibly give a lease to some individual.

"The history of Goldfield is the same now as was written in Tonopah, Virginia City and dozens of other districts. That mining is due for a comeback is best shown in the way banking interests are scouring the country for properties. Not for territory that can produce quick money, and that will peter out, but for mining territory that will produce for years to come. Tonopah at depth has developed new bodies that permit a constant and insisted prosperity. Virginia City, as it is now being developed, will live over a generation at least, and possibly generations. What is wanted is a constant process of money making, in good times and bad times, a mushroom growth, and then a period of decay.

"Goldfield can do the same as Tonopah and Virginia City. The many mining claims here have slowly but surely passed into a few hands, and the development of the district into a big camp, with a constant outpouring of mineral of a temperate value, rather than high value—but persistent in its production—is now looming on the horizon. Sensational are strikes should give way in the new era in this camp to reports of how much the camp has produced from week to week and month to month—then from year to year. This spells real prosperity."
